ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE OF NINE BULGARIAN NEWSPAPERS

Of the 20-odd Bulgarian newspapers received in FDD, nine carry a statement (equivalent to a US newspaper masthead) defining their internal organization in terms of their administrative and editorial departments. The following gives the organizational details of the newspapers as printed in the respective publications during 1953.

Of particular interest is the organizational structure of Za Kooperativno Zemedelie (an agricultural paper). It is unique in that it has four departments that appear to be designed for political orientation, namely, the Propaganda Department, the Mass-Political Department, the Feuilleton Department (which only Rabotnichesko Delo and Za Kooperativno Zemedelie have), and the Humor and Satire Department. The unique fact of the existence of four such departments in one paper may reflect the special importance to Bulgarian Communists of the political indoctrination of the peasantry.

Other interesting features of Za Kooperativno Zemedelie are that it has a Science Department (only Rabotnichesko Delo has a similar department), a Legal Consultation Department (as has Trud), and five departments devoted to special aspects of agriculture.

Rabotnichesko Delo, published in Sofia, the daily organ of the Central Committee of the Bulgarian Communist Party, has the following departments: Party Life, Propaganda, Agriculture, Economics, Letters from Readers, Soviet Union and People's Democracies, Foreign, Local Correspondents, Information, Literature and Art, Local Press, Science and Technology, Criticism and Bibliography, Feuilleton, Illustration, and Finance and Supply.
